Presented in Online International Seminar on Education
Pekanbaru, May 6 2020

Introduction

- Online degree programs and learning facilities are a valuable part of modernized education. With such offerings in academia, students can gain a reputable education and also be afforded more time for personal freedom, work, and study. This is the fantastically beneficial world of virtual education as well as some commonly attributed challenges in online learning itself.
- Online learning can be more difficult for instructors as well as students. Online classroom makes the lecturer can not see students in person, so it makes harder to control how they response to the material, and there is the additional obstacle of mastering the technology.

- There are challenges of online learning that still remain to be faced by the potential student. There are some reasons that make online learning should rightfully be aware of the associated challenges. Let's take a look at five, notable challenges in online learning:
 1. Campus Distractions
 2. Self-Discipline Essential
 3. Technological Reliance
 4. Conflicts in Learning Style
 5. Diminished Social Aspects

Campus Distractions

- Working from home is an amazing, advantage-filled experience. However many advantages you may find in this though, can you make your online learning area as conducive to study as an actual, physical classroom? When getting an online classroom, your online learning area is your campus. Whether you are at a coffee shop hooked up to the free WiFi, or simply at home in a spare bedroom, this area is now your campus. Distractions here can be an enormous challenge to those learning online.

Self-Discipline Essential

- To the most online classroom, the requirements are computer equipment, reliable internet connection, self-discipline and motivation are the top priority. The students should have a control to their self discipline, because it will help them through the online classroom well. Sometimes, freedom that they get from online classroom makes the self discipline of some students decreased.

Technological Reliance

- Another of the challenges of online learning are technology and electricity. In traditional learning facilities, the school provides any technological requirements, and the basics of simple attendance are easily met by just being at school. In Online classroom, when the technological problem from the students comes, the student may not only miss the crucial assignments, but they may also be categorized as absent. Working within the limited of technology means working within the limited of network adapters, electricity, computers, servers, software, web browsers, routers and modems, and etc. If any one of these fails, the connection to the online classroom will not running well.

Conflicts in Learning Style

- Some students have a difficult time applying their own, personal learning style to the environs of the online classroom. Most people have spent the majority of their educational tenure in a physical classroom. As a result, skill sets and learning styles tend to develop as an accompaniment to this in-person, learning environment. Because of this, for some students, online learning takes some difficulties, while others may acclimate quite naturally and easily. This all depends on each individual's learning style.

Diminished Social Aspects

- The final part in our list of the challenges of online learning goes to the loss of many social aspects with the online route. Within the layouts of most degree programs, there are certainly many opportunities given in social interaction with peers. This can be through classroom activity or even “social space” beside the online classroom. Online classroom is great but still not the same as physical, in-person relations. Interacting in person creates more considerable bonds, a camaraderie founded on common work and goals, and many other supportive attributes for the student. This is so challenging to every students and lecturer.

Conclusion

- Online learning seems avoiding any conflicts in learners' learning styles because it develops learners' autonomous learning for their own.
- Online learning creates social distance that becomes a challenge for individual learner and is more likely depending on each individual learning style.

- There are challenges of online learning that still remain to be faced by the potential student. There are some reasons that make online learning should rightfully be aware of the associated challenges. Let's take a look at five notable challenges in online learning:

1. Campus Distractions
2. Self-Discipline Essential
3. Technological Reliance

Diminished Social Aspects

- The final part in our list of the challenges of online learning goes to the loss of many social aspects with the online route. Within the layouts of most degree programs, there are certainly many opportunities given in social interaction with peers. This can be through classroom activity or even "social space" beside the online classroom. Online classroom is great but still not the same as physical, in-person relations. Interacting in person creates more considerable bonds, a camaraderie founded on common work and goals, and many other supportive attributes for the student. This is so challenging to every students and lecturer.
